

BIH Johanna Quandt Professorships: Chairs of the Next Generation

Stiftung Charité is funding the setting up of tenured professorships for the Berlin Institute of Health (BIH). With the BIH Johanna Quandt Professorships we will recruit a new generation of women scientists to Berlin and find new approaches to fund chairs playing an exemplary role in the life sciences of Berlin and beyond.

What constitutes the BIH Johanna Quandt Professorships?

- Thematic openness: Professorships without any certain subject area; appointment to a field of translational medicine the candidates themselves can design (clinical subject fields included)
- Equal opportunity: Professorships for women scientists who have developed academic independence and are expected to become leading in their field during the next years

What is offered for the BIH Johanna Quandt Professorships?

- Professorships with full tenure track: Appointments to W2 level professorships limited once-off to a period of five years with the option of subsequent continuation as permanent full professors at W2 or W3 level
- 2.5 million Euros of funding for salary and endowment over the first five years

Where are the BIH Johanna Quandt Professorships located?

- Joint appointment by BIH and Charité – Universitätsmedizin Berlin for the first five years; Stiftung Charité is funding agency and partner
- Continuation as permanent full professors in cooperation between BIH, Charité – Universitätsmedizin Berlin, and Max Delbrück Center for Molecular Medicine tailored to the candidates' profiles and the professorship designs

What do I need to bring when I would like to apply?

- Scientific and clinical qualifications and achievements at the level of an established but not yet leading woman scientist; clinicians can also be appointed
- An innovative and interdisciplinary concept for a professorship oriented on the BIH guiding notion of translational and systems medicine research
- Application deadline: March 31, 2016
